325 (Annual Report of Cable Television Systems), are no longer necessary given updates to our rules.⁵ The Division's work is now primarily focused on consulting with other Bureaus and Offices and the Media Bureau's other divisions in all aspects of media-related technical rulemakings and enforcement and providing analysis of the Commission's cable industry data, as well as maintaining the Cable Operations and Licensing System (COALS) database, which includes the CARS licensing process.

4. Among other things, the IAD collects, compiles, analyzes and develops reports on relevant industry and market data and information, including conducting rulemakings and preparing reports to Congress on the status of competition in the media industry. With the recent creation of the Office of Economics and Analytics (OEA),⁶ the IAD's economists and a portion of its responsibilities were relocated to the new OEA.

III. DISCUSSION

5. We find that there are notable benefits to bringing the Engineering Division team within the larger IAD. Simplifying the organizational structure of the Bureau will streamline its operations, improve the supervisor-to-employee ratio thereby reducing redundancies in management, and encourage more extensive staff interaction and collaboration. The IAD staff has extensive experience analyzing the media industry and incorporating such analysis into the Bureau's rulemaking and regulation. Therefore, they are well positioned to effectively utilize the technical resources of the Engineering Division. Further, IAD manages the Bureau's collection of data pertaining to media ownership issues. Combining this extensive experience and responsibility for information technology with the Engineering Division's COALS database expertise would be beneficial to the Bureau's management and would coalesce much-needed technical resources. In addition, the mission of both divisions involves providing technical support and subject matter expertise to the Media Bureau's other divisions, as well as consultation and coordination with other Bureaus and Offices related to various policy proceedings, adjudications, and enforcement matters.

6. For these reasons, we believe that combining the Engineering Division and the IAD will promote more effective use of Commission resources. Accordingly, we find that Engineering Division personnel and responsibilities should be moved into the IAD, and the Engineering Division should be eliminated as a separate Media Bureau division. The key objectives of this organizational change are to more efficiently deploy Commission resources, enhance the Bureau's understanding and analysis of the media industry, and rationalize and modernize our organizational structure. We believe that we can best accomplish these objectives through organizational change. In order to effectuate this change, we modify our rules to account for the reorganization.⁷

7. The amendments adopted herein pertain to agency organization, procedure, and practice. Consequently, the notice and comment and effective date provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act contained in 5 U.S.C. §§ 553(b) and (d) do not apply.
